

the daughter of the first Baron. At Dartmouth I saw Mr. Thomas Jones, who gave a good report of all his family. He has just returned from South America. He has a very good character. Haley who is now very well. Mrs. Hargreaves has heard of Richard's safe arrival at Madras which is a great relief to her. He is now in the quarter. He has made her a present of a large quantity of goods to her. He has bottles of the wine. He has also a very good one.

Charles and George and all the children have had the influenza very badly; and have not yet got rid of it. Indeed wherever I have been scarcely a person has escaped; but for myself I have had very little of it. Miss Margaretta came to dine at Dantown on Wednesday; and on Thursday went with me to Duncubry and when I left her at Mr Smith's the clergyman; and went on to Dungundaw where I slept.

Yesterday I continued my journey to Mr Gordon's at Manar where I slept. They were expecting Charles Macarthur and his wife; but they did not arrive. Next Monday they are to have the company of George Leslie this bride Emmeline Macarthur was by invitation to Mr Henry Gordon and dined & slept! both he and she were very kind and kind. and she in particular made many inquiries after you & Mr. Leslie. Mr. Day is a stout & hearty fellow but I think a very thin child. On Sunday Mr. Day went to church with me. In the afternoon I went to dinner & stop at Mr Hamilton's house. Here at last I saw Mr Gordon, our fellow passenger in the morning. He is in pretty good health; but looks old and is nearly blind. While I was here a most dreadful accident occurred: (Captain Gordon's son) I dare say you remember been seeing at the trial by trial one evening, soon after his return from England, having destroyed himself by shooting himself with a pistol. It seemed impossible to account for such a horrid act. but from what I have since heard there appears no doubt that he had been on former occasions liable to attacks of insanity, or something approaching to it. Last Monday I went from Mr. Hemm's to Mr. George Palmer's at Fininderry; when I slept. He and his younger daughter live together there. On Tuesday I went down with them to Dantoon, where all the family still are except Mr.

Jeffrey, who is gone to Lancaster.
