Foreword

While working on the correspondence of Philip Doddridge some years ago, I became aware of the considerable number of letters to and from his wife, Mercy Doddridge, preserved with his own papers at New College, London. Those between her husband and herself (1729-51) I extracted and have listed elsewhere.¹ What follows is a list of letters received or written by her during her widowhood (1751-90).²

Dissenting ministers, once pupils at Northampton, with an attachment to Doddridge which they now transferred to herself, are among her most frequent correspondents: Job Orton and Samuel Clark, who continued her husband's work in the Academy, now removed to Daventry; Samuel Wood of Norwich; Benjamin Sowden of Rotterdam.³ Their letters, with those of many other ministers, provide a mass of untapped information on late eighteenth-century Dissent throughout the country, especially in Norfolk and Suffolk. Mrs Doddridge was also deeply involved in her husband's posthumous publications, and there are many letters concerned with the necessary arrangements, both literary and financial. There is also a long series of letters from her daughter Mercy and from Doddridge's ward Sarah Ekins (later Sarah Stonhouse). The interest of these letters, as of those from Mrs Doddridge's many other women correspondents, is more sociological and feminist.

Together, the letters reflect, in unusual detail, the various concerns of a woman devoted to her late husband's interests but also with plenty of character on her own account. That so few letters of this period remain which she wrote herself must be regretted. Those preserved were written mainly to her daughters or to a minister to whom one of them was at one time attached.

With the letters formerly at New College, London, now in Dr Williams's Library, I have intercalated those formerly in the Congregational Library, now also at Dr Williams's, together with those already in Dr Williams's Library, also the considerable collection in Northampton Public Library, with a few preserved in the John Rylands University Library of Manchester. I am grateful to the Librarians of these Libraries for access to the manuscripts and for permission to include them in this list. I have not sought to enlarge the list by inquiries concerning the holdings of other libraries in which letters to or from Philip Doddridge are known to be preserved. I have, however, included the only letters written by Mercy Doddridge in this period and in print, in A Kentish Country House (Guildford 1894), by Lady Jennings.

I am very grateful to Dr Williams's Trust for its readiness to undertake publication; and to the Trust's Secretary and Librarian for their advice and encouragement.

2 Correspondence between Mercy Doddridge and others than her husband during her husband's lifetime does not appear in either list; but its amount is very small.

Note

Many of Mercy Doddridge's correspondents date their letters by the year, but some do not, or not always. Fortunately she commonly endorsed the letters she received with a date, including that of the year. Notwithstanding the fact that these endorsements sometimes provide the date when a letter was received, not when it was written, in the absence of other evidence of date they are followed here. Dates in brackets are generally those of these endorsements; occasionally, they have been provided by the editor.

Location of letters is always Dr Williams's Library except for those indicated as follows:

KCH Printed in A Kentish Country House, ed. M.A. Jennings, Guildford, 1894.
 LCL The Congregational Library, London, now housed at Dr Williams's Library.

Index

Christian names of correspondents who sign with an initial only have been filled out, where known.

Philip Doddridge is Mrs Doddridge's son; Mercy Doddridge is her daughter. Her daughter Mary (Polly) is indexed both as Mary Doddridge and, after her marriage to John Humphreys, as Mary Humphreys. Doddridge's ward Sarah Ekins, similarly, is indexed, after her marriage to James Stonhouse, as Sarah Stonhouse.

Names occurring in the index to the Calendar of Philip Doddridge's correspondence are distinguished by an asterisk(*).
